

The background of the slide is a red-tinted photograph of a university campus. In the foreground, there is a large, open green lawn. In the middle ground, several trees with sparse, light-colored leaves are scattered across the scene. In the background, there are several multi-story buildings, including a prominent one with a central tower or steeple. The sky is filled with wispy, light-colored clouds. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of red and orange, giving it a warm, autumnal feel.

IMS 202: Framing in the News

Agenda for today

1. Reading/Viewing/Listening discussion
2. Framing definition and what it looks like in the news
3. Types of frames
 - a. gain/loss
 - b. episodic/thematic
4. Group activity on episodic and thematic frames
5. Week 12: Exit Ticket

Does understanding how media effects work help us to make sense of our own information consumption and perspectives of current events?

My class is in middle of studying what objectivity means practically in U.S. news and what it ought to mean. It's my annual takedown of performative neutrality. Monday we're going to do an exercise on how news takes sides despite the rhetoric. Want to try it? Sure you do. (1/x)

To play along, here's what you do. Before you go to the next tweet in this thread, I want you describe in your own thinking what the situation with Russia and Ukraine is, but only in one word. What would you call it if you were relaying it to someone new to the news?

In your own words, what are frames?

Reading/Viewing/Listening

In your own words, what are framing effects?

Walter Lippmann's Public Opinion (1922): "The world outside and the pictures in our heads"

Media Effects

Social or psychological responses occurring in individuals as a result of exposure to media messages.

Framing

“to frame is to select some aspects of a perceived reality and make them more salient in a communicating text, in such a way as to promote a particular problem definition, causal interpretation, moral evaluation, and/or treatment recommendation for the item described.”

(Entman, 1993, p. 52)

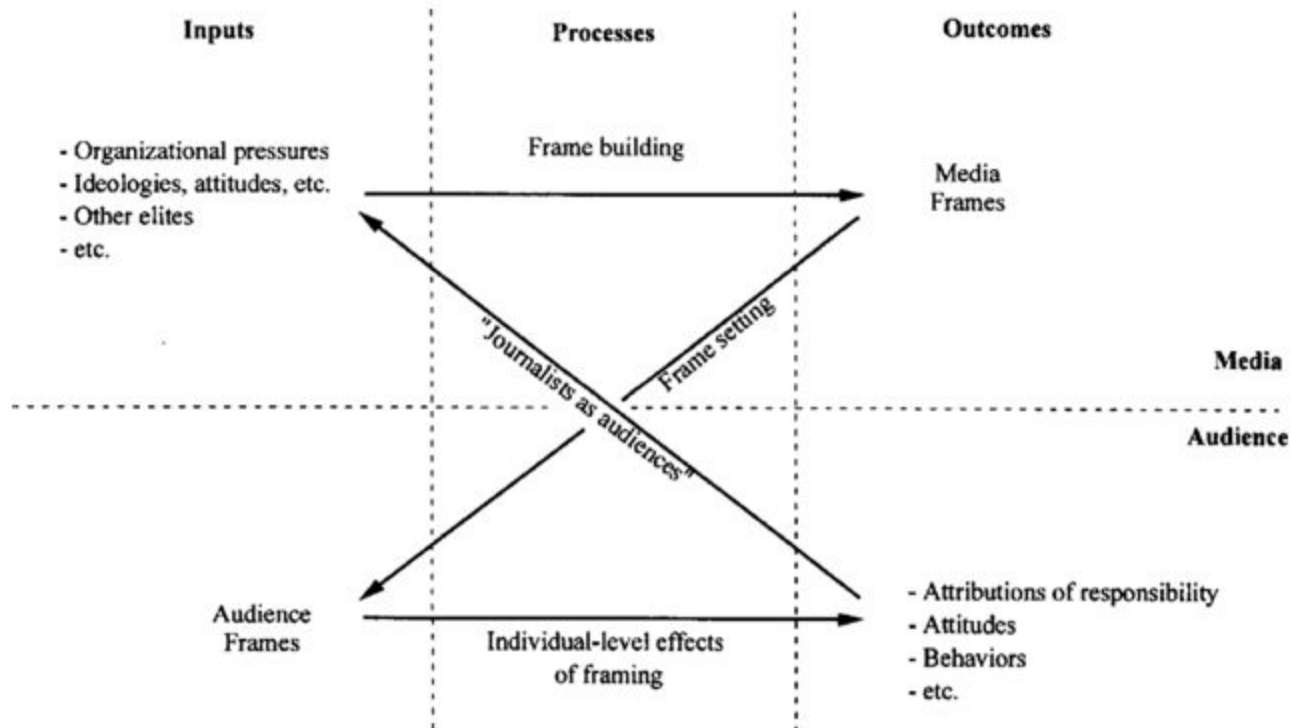

Framing

“The way that journalists approach and organize a story, which can affect what it emphasizes.”

In the BrainFacts.org video, "Why Do We Fall for the Framing Effect," the speaker discusses gains and losses. What are they talking about?

Frames, Biases, and Rational Decision-Making in the Human Brain

Benedetto De Martino,* Dharshan Kumaran, Ben Seymour, Raymond J. Dolan

Human choices are remarkably susceptible to the manner in which options are presented. This so-called “framing effect” represents a striking violation of standard economic accounts of human rationality, although its underlying neurobiology is not understood. We found that the framing effect was specifically associated with amygdala activity, suggesting a key role for an emotional system in mediating decision biases. Moreover, across individuals, orbital and medial prefrontal cortex activity predicted a reduced susceptibility to the framing effect. This finding highlights the importance of incorporating emotional processes within models of human choice and how the brain may modulate the effect of these biasing influences to approximate r

Reading/Viewing/Listening

In the "Framing Theory" article from Communication Studies, the author discusses episodic/thematic frames. What are episodic/thematic frames and why should we care about them?

Types of frames

- Episodic frames
 - Event-based news reporting
 - Focused on individual actors
- Thematic frames
 - Broad perspective, highlighting context
 - Focusing on trends and collective outcomes

WEEK 12: EXIT TICKET

In pairs, identify at least two examples of episodic framing and two examples of thematic framing on the topic of the housing crisis or climate change (stories here: <https://bit.ly/3NDcECq>)

Episodic Framing: Focuses on a single event; refers to the portrayal and presentation of issues through either a specific event that serves as an anecdotal exemplification of the broader issue or the story of an affected person who could put a human face on the issue.

Thematic Framing: Focuses on trends over time; applies a wide-angle lens to the coverage of the issue – focusing on trends over time, and highlighting contexts and environments.
